Blue Heron Family

By Ning Lin

Florida is the haven for wildlife and wildlife photographers. There are so many birds migrate to Florida or stay locally year range. Early this year I spent a long week-end in Orlando area just for photographing birds. I saw sandhill cranes with 3 days old babies, blue heron with babies, reddish egret, osprey catching fish, anhinga and many others.

This blue heron couple with two babies in a nest on tree top is located in a small county park. The female heron stays with her babies most of the time waiting for the male heron bringing fish. When the male arrive, the female has chance to leave the nest. However, exchange of role does not happy often. I went 3 times and waited there totally 11 hours to catch this moment: the couple kiss before the female leaving the nest. She just flew a circle and came back to kiss again. Then she flew away and he fed the babies with a big fish. Canon 1Dx Mark 2, EF 400mm f/4 + 1.4X III, ISO 1000, 1/3200 Sec, f/9.0, Lightroom and Nik.

White Flower

By Elizabeth Bedard

This flower is actually light yellow. It was in a planter in my yard and after it rained, it looked really pretty so I took a few photos of it. Over the years I played with it a few times, but I didn't like the result. This time, I went into Nik and made it monochrome and vignette / burned down the distracting back ground and I felt it looked better than it did in color.

Anhinga's Catch

By Ning Lin

When I was waiting the blue heron family, this Anhinga was diving to catch fish in front of me. When catching a fish, Anhinga tossed the fish before swallowing the it. Unlike ducks, ospreys and pelicans which coat their feathers with oil from their uropygial gland, the anhinga does not have waterproof feathers. Their feathers get soaked upon immersion in water. Therefore, they spend a lot of time to dry their wet wings and absorb heat. So the chance to see Anhinga catching fish is not common. Nikon D850, 200-500mm at 500mm, ISO 1250, 1/3200 Sec, f/8.0, Lightroom and Nik.

Doug Ridgeway from council is putting together a trip to Africa in December—Here are a few notes on his trip and the last pages of the newsletter have more information:

I am returning to South Africa in early December, 2019. That is the start of their rainy season. Things will be greening up and the babies will be born.

I have decided to go with a company called, Mafigeni Safari Company. One thing I like about them is that they are a small family run business and you aren't tied into a structured tour, unless you want to be. They had a booth at the International Sportsman's Show this year and I spent a lot of time talking with Jill Kleynhans, Mafigeni's owner. While still a bit flexible, I am looking at leaving on December 5 and will be returning on the 20th. Mafigeni offers several options. Their base itinerary is for 9 day and 8 nights which includes air from here and one night in Kruger NP. The price of that is $3,680.00. I am adding 2 extra nights, 3 is an option, still 9 day and 8 nights, for $150/night. I am also adding on 5 days and 4 nights to go to the Chobe NP and end the trip at Victoria Falls. This adds an additional $2,750 to the price. I will be putting this together as a group but, you aren't restricted to the itinerary, I am setting for myself. I am paying my own way so what you pay goes directly to Mafigeni, i.e. I am getting nothing but friends to travel with. Here are some options, prices, includes a 15% Government Tax:

1. Just do the base trip, 9 days - 8 nights = $4232
2. 9 days - 8 nights, includes 2 extra nights in Kruger = $4577
3. 13 days - 12 nights, 3 nights in Kruger, Chobe NP and Victoria Falls = $7000.

If you are interested, please contact Doug at dougridgwayphotography@gmail.com.

Just what is Negative Space and Dead Space in an image? And are they good or bad?

Every competition seems to evoke some comment about either Negative Space or Dead Space and what effect it has on the image being judged. Many of us (including many judges) don't have a good understanding of the difference between these two concepts, let alone whether it's a good thing or a bad thing as it impacts the strength of an image.

Here is a concise article explaining the difference and the impact of each of these concepts.

https://visualwilderness.com/fieldwork/negative-space-versus-dead-space?utm\_medium=Visualwilderness&utm\_source=onesignal

Thanks Pat for passing on an informative article!

To use green screen technology you need to install a green screen program. I use PhotoKey Pro. It's $189. There are others out there, but after working with a few I find this one suits my needs best and it does more than I know how to use at the moment.

You will need a green background. I have cloth, green paper roll and a pop-up screen. The cloth can be used as background or draped over a chair or stool to make it disappear when a model uses it.

Shoot your model at least 5 feet away from the green background to help prevent a green reflection around them. To further prevent the green spill use lighting between the model and background.

Models should not wear green or blue, they will disappear.

This is more difficult, but, you can select out your subject then use your color picker and bucket tool and flood the background (after selecting Inverse) with green.

Make a folder and add all your foregrounds and backgrounds to make the whole process easier.
